New Drug Testing Technologies and State Drug Testing Laws

This is an exciting time to be either a provider or user of drug testing. Consider the following:

- On February 28th, the Department of Transportation (DOT) issued a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (NPRM) for oral fluid drug testing, essentially endorsing a drug testing method other than urine for the first time in 30+ years.
- The industry is finding innovative ways to address and overcome its biggest threat in three decades—marijuana legalization. It turns out, testing for marijuana is still legal in virtually every state.
- New collection methods such as telehealth apps are making it possible for employers to get specimens collected even when traditional methods are unavailable.
- And there are some new and intriguing screening methods, including fitness-for-duty testing, that could someday change how both providers and employers address substance abuse in the workplace.

Continue reading this article for how new technology and state laws are impacting the drug testing industry and what you can do to be prepared for these changes.
